“Why do we die?” “What a squat?” “How does that Trinity thing work?” Unfortunately, satisfying answers aren’t always at the ready. “Go ask your moth- er,” is only acceptable once … twice if it’s Father’s Day. “I don’t know” is a legitimate answer, but the real grace comes in what we say next: “Let’s look it up together.”

There is something special about finding answers with our children. Those are the lessons that stick.

8. Might for Right

“Integrity” is a term that gets thrown around pretty casually. In a celebrity-dominated culture, it can be easy to overlook the actions of public figures and forget that they’re setting examples for our kids. It can be challenging to point out to our children that — whatever their talents and abilities — they are to be celebrated, used, and cherished. A gift for spelling, singing, or math is no less worthy of praise than the gift of a deadly jump shot or an Olympic medal, an Olympic Super Bowl or an Olympic gold medal, a 90-mph fastball. Put test papers up on the fridge. There is something familiar with the professional athletes who, after winning the Super Bowl or an Olympic gold medal, praise Jesus for their success. While it’s most comfortable, it never has the impact I look for. Let’s face it, like Tevye in Fiddler on the Roof, we as Catholics hold on to much “tradition” that other religions just don’t seem really uncool. These are the moments that separate the men from the boys in fatherhood, the defining conversations that distinguish us as parents rather than playmates. These are the times that we not only teach what the word “integrity” means, but show our children that we have it.

We’re all familiar with the professional athletes who, after winning the Super Bowl or an Olympic gold medal, praise Jesus for their success. While it’s most comfortable, it never has the impact I look for. Let’s face it, like Tevye in Fiddler on the Roof, we as Catholics hold on to much “tradition” that other religions just don’t “get.” Ashes on our foreheads. The Hail Mary. The Communion of Saints. Rosaries. Novenas. Holy Water. These “sacramentals” are what make us uniquely Catholic. They give comfort, grow faith, and are very much worth preserving. Passing on these rituals to our children — not just by rote, but by practice — teaches them that being Catholic means that they are part of — and not just by rote, but by practice — teaches them that being Catholic means that they are part of deep and long-held traditions. And it teaches them that, as Catholics, they will never be alone.

“Traditionnnnn! Tradition” (1 Corinthians 11:2).

My mother collected more than 100 statues of the Madonna, and her devotion had a huge impact on me. My four siblings, and scores of others she met throughout her life. After she died, most of those statues went back to the people who gave them to her as reminders of my mother’s belief in the strength of Mary’s holy intercession. When I tell that story to non-Catholics, however, it never has the impact I look for. Let’s face it, like Tevye in Fiddler on the Roof, we as Catholics hold on to much “tradition” that other religions just don’t “get.” Ashes on our foreheads. The Hail Mary. The Communion of Saints. Rosaries. Novenas. Holy Water. These “sacramentals” are what make us uniquely Catholic. They give comfort, grow faith, and are very much worth preserving. Passing on these rituals to our children — not just by rote, but by practice — teaches them that being Catholic means that they are part of deep and long-held traditions. And it teaches them that, as Catholics, they will never be alone.
Being a Catholic dad is both a great privilege and a big responsibility. Along with their mothers, we’ve been entrusted to raise our kids to know and love God and to prepare them for lives as Catholic men and women. Odds are, we’re good at it, we enjoy it, and we all deserve a pat on the back for the work we do raising our children in the Faith. In this pamphlet, you will undoubtedly see some things suggested that you’re already doing. But that doesn’t mean you can trust and believe in unconditionally — like their faith in God is to teach them that there are things they simply cannot know and love — whether that means regular prayer and Scripture study, spiritual reading, or active involvement in our churches. Faith is learned best by example, and it requires genuine belief. It requires surrender. And the single best way to raise children who have unshakeable faith in God is to teach them that there are things they can trust and believe in unconditionally — like their dads.

1. Keep Holy the Lord’s Day . . . and All Those Other Days (Exodus 20:8).

Fatherhood is the ultimate exercise in getting priorities straight. In too many households, mom is the “keeper of the Faith.” She’s the one who herds the family into the car on Sunday morning for Mass. But this cannot be good enough for us. Our kids are watching, and they will do what we do. They’re watching if we’re ambivalent about getting to Mass. They’re watching if we’re checking the time during the homily, calculating whether or not we’ll make it home before kickoff. But this good news is, they’re also watching when we do it, we enjoy it, and we all deserve a pat on the back for the work we do raising our children in the Faith. In this pamphlet, you will undoubtedly see some things suggested that you’re already doing. But that doesn’t mean you can trust and believe in unconditionally — like their faith in God is to teach them that there are things they simply cannot know and love — whether that means regular prayer and Scripture study, spiritual reading, or active involvement in our churches. Faith is learned best by example, and it requires genuine belief. It requires surrender. And the single best way to raise children who have unshakeable faith in God is to teach them that there are things they can trust and believe in unconditionally — like their dads.

2. Teach Your Children Faith (John 20:29).

If we want our children to have faith in God, we’ll teach them to believe in things they cannot experience with their five natural senses. Talking about molecules, or germs, or black holes is a good start. We all accept that there are everyday realities we’ll never see first-hand, but that are real. This is, of course, the foundation for teaching them our Faith. We need to nurture our own Faith, of course, in order to be able to teach it — whether that means regular prayer and Scripture study, spiritual reading, or active involvement in our churches. Faith is learned best by example, and it requires genuine belief. It requires surrender. And the single best way to raise children who have unshakeable faith in God is to teach them that there are things they can trust and believe in unconditionally — like their dads.

The Sacrament of Reconciliation is a uniquely Catholic ritual. Few other traditions require that sinners confess sins aloud. In this way, Catholicism teaches accountability as well as reminding us of God’s bottomless well of forgiveness — great lessons to teach our children when we are wrong, ask their forgiveness when we mess up, and show them that we and our mothers forgive, and ask forgiveness of, each other all the time. This reminds them — as God reminds us — that mistakes are allowed. They are fully human and fully expected as part of our faith journey.

An old expression advises, “When there’s a piano to move, don’t reach for the stool.” Generosity certainly isn’t a value unique to Catholicism. But making it a non-negotiable part of our families’ lives — no matter what our circumstances — is a part of our Faith. Again, this is behavior we as dads can and must model if we expect our children to learn compassion. Let your kids put the envelope in the church collection basket on Sunday. When family, friends, or charitable organizations ask for your help, identify what you enjoy or what you’re best at and pitch in. Let your children see you giving, and talk with them about why you give and why giving is important.

My wife, a Catholic theologian, has a favorite quote from Rabbi David Wolpe’s book, The Healer of Shattered Hearts: “It doesn’t have to be somber to be sacred.” Many of us make the mistake of expecting our children to apply an adult’s maturity and sophistication to our Faith, but one path to revealing the beauty of Catholicism is allowing kids to experience it on their terms. Using play, story, and song to allow Scripture and Tradition to unfold for the youngest of our flock is the foundation of children’s Liturgy of the Word, Vacation Bible School, and religious education classes. When my wife and I read Bible stories to our kids, we do character voices. When we’re driving home from Mass, we re-sing the closing song (the upbeat ones, anyway). If we truly believe we are created in God’s image, then certainly laughter and lightheartedness can enrich our faith as well.

The Association of American Publishers has an ongoing campaign called “Get Caught Reading,” in which celebrities and other well-known figures are photographed with their favorite books. Much the same kind of modeling can apply to prayer. Get “caught” praying for your kids. Be “Mr. Doesn’t-Know-It-All” as you and pray with your children — over meals, at bedtime, or at any time. Praying with someone is a pretty intimate act. In our house, we have a little outline we stick to:

1. We always start with prayers of gratitude, thanking God for our many blessings. Then, we move to asking for blessings for people we know and love, or for people who might need God’s help. Finally, we can get into the nitty-gritty “gimmes”: praying for good weather for field trips or for the strength and wisdom to do well in our work or at school.

7. Be “Mr. Doesn’t-Know-It-All” (Psalm 139:5-7).

The sky is blue. “Why?” Because of the sun. “Why?” Because when short-spectrum light waves from the sun enter our atmosphere, they strike air molecules and our eyes perceive the effect as blue. “Why?” Sigh. We’ve all played the “Why?” game. Dads often put a lot of pressure on themselves not to get stumped. But questions of faith are common and often come out of the blue.
